COAST NO. 2/HISTORY SERIES TO COAST

AMERICA, PRE-COLUMBIAN TIMES TO 1775

readings in colonial history for young adults

A General View

"...legions of ordinary people, most of them forever nameless in the pages of history, swarmed across the Atlantic and — out of disparate elements — molded on the continent a luxuriant and unique culture."

Henry F. Graff in the "Introduction" to The new world by Richard Morris.

*The American Heritage history of the Thirteen Colonies

Louis B. Wright

During three centuries as colonies the wilderness of North America became bustling cities and well-worked farms, and Europeans of diverse nationalities were transformed into Americans.

*The Americans: the colonial experience Daniel J. Boorstin
In a century and a half the settlers of the North American wilderness established the outlines of a new civilization. How did they do it?

NF

*The Atlantic frontier

Louis B. Wright

The customs, religions, and politics brought by the colonists from Europe were transformed by frontier living into our American beliefs.

Lorenzo J. Greene

Although their numbers were few, Negroes, both slave and free, influenced the social, economic, and political affairs of New England.

*The old South: the founding of American civilization

Thomas J. Wertenbaker

From extensive plantations and small yeoman's farms, from cities where artisans and merchants flourished, from the back country of the pine belt came the distinctive civilization of the colonial South.

Planters and pioneers: life in colonial Virginia Parke Rouse
Beginning with Jamestown, a small settlement on the edge of wilderness, Virginians cleared forests, built homes, schools, roads, and churches, laid out vast plantations, and established the society which helped to make America.

*Provincial society, 1690-1763

James T. Adams

As the forest was pushed back from the Atlantic coast, colonists turned their attention to the development of schools, roads, newspapers — and to a livlier interest in politics. NF

*The Quaker colonies

Sydney G. Fisher

Thrifty and industrious, the Quakers proved that peace and contemplation did not conflict with building a wealthy and successful colony.

NF

Settlers on the Eastern Shore, 1607-1750

For a century and a half European settlers labored to make the wilderness their home and, in the course of so doing, they became Americans.

NF

*Spain in America

Charles Gibson

Spanish colonies in the southern and western parts of North America held far different attitudes towards government and religion than those of the English settlers in Massachusetts and Virginia.

Virginia: the English heritage in America

''The east coast of North America was English for 175 years before it became American." And in these years our language, law, and national character were forged.
